PREMIER CASTRO: That is an individual thing. Don't forget the human rights.

WALTERS: [Laughter]

Many people in this country feel that Cuba is Fidel and Fidel Cuba, and there are some people who even think he is a dictator.

PREMIER CASTRO: What is a dictator? Because I cannot identify myself with a dictator.

WALTERS: A man who has almost total control, a man who runs a country, a man who allows no dissent, a man who has the most, and almost total, power. Is that Fidel Castro?

PREMIER CASTRO: Yes, only in one of the points: a man that leads, but not a man who has all power, not a man that takes any personal decisions, no other thing. Simply, I am a leader, but I am very distant from having a unipersonal power or an absolute power.

WALTERS: You allow no dissent. Your newspapers, radio, television, motion pictures are under state control. People can dissent in their meetings, in their congresses, but no dissent or opposition is allowed in the public media.

PREMIER CASTRO: We do not have your same conceptions. Our concept of freedom of the press is not yours, and I say this very honestly. I have nothing to hide. If you ask us if a paper could appear here against socialism, I could say honestly, "No, it can not appear." It would not be allowed [unintelligible] the government or the people.

Okay. In that sense, we do not have the freedom of the press that you possess in the U.S., and we are very satisfied about that. And there is no scandals like take place in the U.S., nor do we have commercial propaganda that you have in the U.S., none of that. Our mass media serve the revolution.

Now, then, as long as the revolution develops and as long as hostility against Cuba exists and as long as there is counter-revolutions supported by the United States and as long as this struggle exists, we will not allow any paper that goes against the revolution. Simply like that.

And besides, who pays for it? The CIA?

WALTERS: I sometimes feel that you feel everything, every thing comes back to the CIA. When do you think -- or, do you have proof of the last CIA attack against you, the last plan, perhaps, to assassinate you?

Dear Ms. Kungle:

The Director of Central Intelligence has asked me to thank you for your letter of June 21st regarding a speaker for the United States Civil Defense Council's annual meeting during the first week in October in Long Beach, California. I am sorry to inform you that it is just impossible to provide a speaker this year due to the extremely heavy schedule of the Director and the senior staff members of the Agency.

However, the Director sends his very best wishes for a pleasant and successful meeting.

Sincerely,

NOTE FOR: Director of Central Intelligence

AT Here are the two papers which we will release this week. The first one, entitled, "A Discussion Paper on Soviet Petroleum Production," will be distributed to the media tomorrow morning (Wednesday, 29 June), and will be made available at mid-afternoon when [] appears before a meeting of the Advisory Committee on East-West Trade at the Commerce Department.

The second, a study entitled, "China Oil Production Prospects," will be released on Thursday in the same way that all unclassified papers are released, except that I shall make distribution again to the media.

Admiral Stansfield Turner
Director of Central Intelligence
Washington, D.C., 20505

Dear Admiral Turner,

The editors of Penthouse magazine have asked me to inform you that they would like to feature you as the subject of a Penthouse Interview. They would like me to conduct the interview at your convenience.

In the not too distant past, I would have felt it would be fruitless to approach the Director of Central Intelligence with such a proposal. But in view of your efforts to give the public a better understanding of intelligence activities, it seemed to me that you might welcome the opportunity to reach the approximately five million Americans who buy Penthouse each month. (Actually, surveys have indicated that a single copy of Penthouse is passed along to an average of four or five persons, resulting in an estimated readership of some 20 million. The Penthouse audience is considerably larger than that of the major newspapers and news magazines. It is widely dispersed across the nation and, the surveys tell us, rather well educated.)

The Penthouse Interview is a particularly good vehicle for some one in a sensitive position because the subject has more control over content than in narrative articles where the writer not only seeks out counterpoint to the subject's remarks, but also injects his own point of view.

In the Penthouse Interview, the questions and answers are tape recorded and reproduced without embroidery. There is some editing for length and to correct whatever grammatical errors either the subject or the interviewer might make. In some cases the subject is permitted to review the edited transcript, and the editors have said they would be happy to extend this courtesy to you.

Customarily in Penthouse, an interview is announced with an introduction of a few hundred words. Then, in your case, what would follow would be whatever you want to say about the world of intelligence--how you see yourself and the United States functioning in it, for example, what changes have been occurring, what lays ahead, etc.

I see this as an opportunity to lay out the realities of intelligence work and to dispel some of the myths of agents in trench coats creeping down dark alleys in Istanbul. (And, if it turns out I've got my myths mixed up, you can straighten me out, too.) I think we could have a great chat. It would be fascinating for me and I sincerely think it could be useful to you.

I look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

Joseph B. Treaster

P.S. I am sending a copy of this letter to in the Public Information Office, Central Intelligence Agency, who, I assume you know, I first contacted in regard to arranging a Penthouse Interview with you and who suggested that I write to you directly.

ROBERT M. ANCELL

30 June 1977

AT
Admiral Stansfield Turner, USN
Director
Central Intelligence Agency
Washington, DC

Dear Admiral Turner:

I recently completed detailed consultations with a literary agent in New York, and the net result was a complete restructuring of my book FOUR STARS. The agent's criticism was based primarily on the marketability of the book once it is finished. In his opinion the old form was much too cumbersome.

The enclosed brief outline represents the direction the book will now take. I believe it is a sound and thorough approach to the subject.

My plan for completing the portion dealing with you and the position of Director of Central Intelligence Agency is as follows:

First, contact your public affairs officer and seek his cooperation in developing a complete picture of your position. I am aware that this will have to be approached with caution due to the sensitive nature of your job.

Second, contact several individuals such as key associates, aides, staff members and others who will be asked for their brief comments and observations on your position and the way you go about the job. I am enclosing an example of a reply for your study.

I greatly appreciate the assistance you have given me in the past, and look forward with much optimism toward completion of the remaining details by the end of the Summer.

Most respectfully,

FOUR STARS

by

Robert M. Ancell

An Outline

FOUR STARS spotlights America's four star generals and admirals, a group of highly competent, dedicated and often misunderstood professionals about whom little or nothing is known outside of the military environment. By focusing on the four star positions of today, and the gentlemen who are entrusted with the greatest responsibility in the history of the United States, FOUR STARS will acquaint the public with the four star generals and admirals who have made it to the very top of their profession. The book will not only deal with the four star officers themselves, but will explain the positions to which they are assigned.

To give further exposure to four star rank, and to give recognition to the many four star generals and admirals of the past, FOUR STARS will compare the senior officers of today with their counterparts of the past. Some of the questions which will be answered include: Are today's four star generals and admirals different in any way with their predecessors, particularly those who achieved a great deal of notoriety in time of war? How do today's four star officers compare with those of the past in terms of age, backgrounds, education, experience, and so on? Do we have among today's four star generals and admirals the makings of the Pattons, Eisenhowers, MacArthurs and Halseys of the next war? How did today's and yesterday's four star generals and admirals get to the top? How did they perform when they got there?

It is recognized that due to the sheer numbers of four star generals and admirals, primarily those of the past, it is impossible to highlight every officer's career. There are enough similarities, however, to insure that an accurate picture is presented through the use of only a representative number of these generals and admirals.

FOUR STARS will be structured in such a manner as to give a complete description of four star rank and an historical perspective first, followed by the detailed studies of each of the four star positions, and their commanders, for each of the Services. The final chapter of the book will be somewhat speculative, in that an attempt will be made to predict the four star generals and admirals of the future based upon historical criteria and trends.
